CLP Welcomes New Certificants

Twenty-five professionals representing six countries earn the CLP credential during extended spring testing window.

CHARLOTTE, NC (October 5, 2020)—Certified Licensing Professionals, Inc. (CLP) announced that 25 professionals who work in licensing, technology transfer and intellectual property management passed the Certified Licensing Professional exam and earned the credential during the 2020 spring testing window. CLP extended the spring and fall exam windows due to the COVID-19 pandemic. Candidates can test through November 30, 2020 in person at a testing center or via remote proctoring from their home or office.

The new CLP certificants represent the United States, United Kingdom, Canada, Saudi Arabia, India, and China. These individuals work in a diverse range of employment settings—universities, corporations, law firms, private organizations, research centers, healthcare organizations, and government entities.

“The year 2020 has been challenging worldwide; however, the CLP credential continues to be a prime indicator of excellence in licensing and intellectual property knowledge. On behalf of the CLP Board of Governors, I applaud these new certificants for accomplishing this feat and demonstrating their commitment to professional excellence, despite the year’s many disruptions,” said Jim Deane, CLP President and Chair.

Earning the CLP establishes credibility, demonstrates knowledge, and helps individuals practicing in the diverse field of licensing and technology transfer reach their personal and professional goals.
